BECOME A PART OF HISTORY—SHARE YOUR STORY

While on a recent trip to Tennessee we stopped at a McDonald’s restaurant for lunch. At a large table nearby sat a group of 8 men. I could see them directly but my wife had her back to them. One man began telling a tale about a “Big Orange belly washer”. Now being from Tennessee I had no idea what a belly washer was. My wife said it was a large size soda pop in a bottle and in this case it was orange flavored and what most people in the South called Nehi Orange Soda. As the story progressed and because I was in their line of sight, I did not want them to know I was listening or see me laughing. But try as we might we were both shaking with laughter. The gentlemen continued with several other stories and we found it very difficult to leave this fine entertainment.

Since returning to Golden in 2005, we have had opportunities to listen to many of your stories, both historical and entertaining. We should try to preserve them by either handwritten or typed.

Storytelling is becoming a lost art. Everyone has a story to share. Let’s hear yours!

You may send by email or USPS to Roger Flesner

Plattdeutsch: Want to learn a little of the language some of the first settlers used when they came to the Golden area? Try some of the following. Spelling is in English sounds.

R r: trill tongue g g: grate your palate underlined: say slowly Letters spread: say slowly

1. Laat uns maan a-ahste Oerl-ya uup dae L a a mp g gite’n.
(Let us first pour oil in the lamp.)
2. Dae Zeepel maakt meen Oog’n thraw’n. (The onion makes my eyes tear.)
3. Haal me ggrow ein Puett Ta-baak. (Get me quickly a bag of tobacco.)

Plattdeutsch is pronounced Plaatduuts. This refers to low German vernacular dialects spoken in northern Germany. Also called “Low German” or “Flat German” so called because of the land they inhabited in northern Germany.

A Bit of History.

Christmas was a high festival in the Church year and East Fresians made the most of it. A week or so before Christmas, a living tree, cedar or firm, was cut and brought into the house. It was set up in the parlor or living room; this room was probably not heated. The door to this room was kept closed until Christmas Eve when there was a grand unveiling—usually after the Church service.

If there was not tree; remember there was limited living space children put out a china plate and hoped the “Christmas Man” (weinachtsmann) or “Christ child” (Christkindt) would leave fruit or candy and/or gifts.

Since these were pre-electric times, the tree was often lighted with candles. You can imagine the danger this presented so the candles were soon extinguished.

In the early 1900’s mail order houses (Sears & Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, etc.) offered an artificial tree made of wood and wire and covered with turkey feathers dyed green. These trees were decorated with baubles and ornaments, and popcorn and cranberries strung into long ropes. Aluminum tinsel could be bought but not during WWII years, as I recall. I remember finding paperwork that listed the price of a three foot tree at $11.00. The Golden Historical Society Museum is fortunate to have a replica of the turkey feather tree,

The candle holders (see photo) are a recent contribution by Lucille Aden Flesner of Quincy, IL. Her father was Menard Aden and the family’s early home was a farm in the Bowen area. Lucille’s deceased husband, Harry, was an electrician when they lived at Golden. She remembers the holders being used in the Aden home. They are fashioned so they can be clipped to the tree branch.

All churches put up a large, live tree. This was usually the work of the Young People’s class. As you can imagine, it was “oohed” and “aahed” over by young and old. Before electricity, they too used candles. Several men, usually bachelors, got the job of sitting, facing the tree with their backs to the program being presented. They were armed with buckets of water and a long pole with a cloth sop attached to put out any threatening flame.
